Summary

After an innocent question, Class 1-A learns just how terrifying Izuku's analysis is. Nedzu's along for the ride.

Notes

This is a shorter fic but was just as fun to write! Thanks to all the co-creators, and special thanks to the discord users like Weebie who don't have an Ao3 account.

It was a surprisingly boring Friday night in the dorm common room. Nothing to do and minds wondering, it was Ashido who asked the question. "Hey guys! If one of us was to turn into a villain or something, who would be the scariest?"

“Ashido! You can’t say stuff like that!” Iida exclaimed, jumping up from his desk and vigorously hand chopping the air. Most of the class ignored him and started discussing, throwing out names like Tokoyami and Bakugou.

“WHAT THE FUCK DO YOU MEAN, SPARKY?!” Bakugou insulted Kaminari.

"Dude, I'm just saying… you yell at people a lot and you're so… explodey."

"And you act kind of like a villain.”

"Hmm...I don't think Kacchan would be any scarier as a villain than he normally is anyway..." Izuku mumbled. He shifted at the sidelines, picking at the beige carpet.

"IF ANYONE HERE WOULD MAKE A SCARY VILLAIN IT'D BE FUCKING DEKU, NOT ME!" Bakugou growled, slamming his hand on his desk.

Silence. Then immediate laughter.

"You don't actually believe that, right?"

"Wait, are we talking about the same Midoriya?"

“He’s too soft!”

"Really dude? Midoriya?"

"He cries too much to be a villain!"

"He's so nice!"

"There's no way!"

“You losers haven’t had to sit through his rants about fucking quirks and their stupid weaknesses for years!” Bakugou yelled. Jirou thought about it, then paled after coming to the realisation.

"I just can't see it." Kaminari insisted. Izuku was blushing, obviously uncomfortable.

“How often do you extras see him mutter about the best ways to take down a villain!? He’s fucking intricate. Deku, show them your fuckin' notebooks!" Bakugou deigned to address Izuku.

"Kacchan, maybe we shouldn't.... and my notes aren't that good anyways."

“Shut up useless Deku! SHOW THEM THE NOTES!!” Bakugou screeched, trying to prove his point and obvious correctness. Izuku meekly complied, sighing as he got a notebook from his backpack.

"It's only logical to look for that kind of thing." He said, returning from his room, arms full of notebooks. Jirou snatched one, wincing at her violent reaction, and turned to a random page. She only read one sentence in the charred book before it fell out of her hands.

"This is about Aizawa-sensei!"

“It says to go for the eyes... but how?” The text further delved into speculations about Aizawa weaknesses.

"Umm, well, you could use an irritant to force him to close his eyes, like pepper spray or tear gas," Izuku replied without thinking.

"Why would you be writing about our teacher like that?"

He flushed, “W-well if we go against our teachers again then I need to find out the best strategy.“

"Wait, why the fuck do you suggest targeting his students because 'Despite pretending otherwise, Eraserhead is actually quite emotional and gets attached to all of his students to the point where he will put their safety above his own always. This would be one of his biggest weak points in any battle. Even suggesting one of them is in harm's way causes a small enough distraction to deal a decisive blow ,'" Jirou reads aloud, having retrieved the notebook.

"Dude, that's kind of really messed up?" Sero comments. Bakugou noticed another page in the notebook, this one on himself. Ashido immediately regretted her earlier decision, realising how fucked up it all was.

"Because it's true? Anybody could see that? It’s important to look at everything, no matter how immoral. It’s just a speculation after all.” Izuku awkwardly shrugged. "Besides, it's good to know what villains might plan?"

"Midoriya! These are not thoughts a UA student should be having!" Iida scolded, chopping his arms up and down to emphasize his point. Izuku blinked, confused.

“You have to save people no matter what Iida, sometimes you have to do dirty tricks.” Izuku acted like it was common sense to write such things, his demeanor showing bewilderment at all the speculation. "If you had to choose between maiming a villian permanently and saving a child, wouldn't you save the child no matter the cost?"

Iida struggled to come up with a response.

“But... That’s just how I always saw it,” Izuku adds

"Mido, that's still kinda scary," Aishido murmurs, shifting a little away.

Bakugou was scowling, a quiet rage simmering. "What do you mean you'd go for my elbows, Deku? Hey nerd tell them how long it took you to think of this stuff," Bakugou growled after reading the rest of his page.

"Ten minutes. Maybe twenty max. It takes longer to organize everything properly though. Is that weird? Like I said, anybody could do it."

Gasps of shock rang out in the room, looking at the cinnamon rolls notebooks with barely disguised fear.

"What a mad banquet of Darkness."

“Plus, the palms, that’s where the explosions happen, so hitting those would be fatal too. You forgot that part. Hmm, I've also noticed that you've been rubbing wrists lately...I should add that to the notes," Izuku mutters thoughtfully, before forcibly pulling himself out of a mutter storm. "And besides, your Quirk would be useless without your hands. Isn't that right, Kacchan?"

"What? It's not like i'd actually do any of it to you! It’s all speculation! What comes and goes in my head! It's not even my best plan, to be honest."

Everyone went apeshit. Bakugou wasn't entirely sure what he was feeling right now. He presumed it was fear.

"Not your best plan?" Yaoyorozu questioned timidly. "Then what is?"

Izuku smiled, and took out a new notebook. “Here! A plan against the league! I’m really proud of this one!”

"I think we need to alert Aizawa-sensei of this development." Iida said, turning to find said teacher while this was going on, unable to face his friend any longer.

Izuku arched his eyebrow. "Ah, okay-" Izuku said after a moment, and started to lower his notebook, when his pocket vibrated.

“... Midoriya, who’s that?”

He picked up his phone. "A message from Principal Nedzu?" he replied. The atmosphere went cold with fear.

"W-what does he want?" Uraraka asked hesitantly.

Jirou snatched Izuku's phone, ”I want to hear more. Keep reading out loud. Your notes are most intriguing, Young Midoriya. Start with notebook #1 if you please. ”

“No! That’s from when I was young!!” Izuku cried out in embarrassment. The room was shell shocked. Bakugou quietly left the room.

"Those were terrible. I didn't even know kanji yet."

The phone vibrates again. " ‘Do it or bring them all to me.’ "

"They're bad!" He continued, trying to get out of the situation.

"Is- is Principal Nedzu watching us right now?" someone quietly wondered from the crowd.

"When isn't he watching?" Todoroki, ever the conspiracy theorist, stated matter of factly.

The phone vibrated again. ‘I’m always watching! :)’

"Ugh, ok fine. My first entry was on my mom. I'll read you that one." Izuku gave in. “It’s about how if she used her quirk she could possibly tear apart something atom by atom.”

"You see, she has a minor telekinesis quirk called Attraction of Small Objects. She can pull small objects towards her. Theoretically, she could rip things apart because atoms are small. She could also manipulate the atoms to create a whole new object or thing, there are only about... 109 types of atoms? So she could theoretically reconstruct a squirrel into a cabbage. Or she could incapacitate someone by moving their organs, like a heart or brain, messing with bodily functions. But it would take a lot of concentration and training to do… Aaaaahhh, it's so embarrassing reading it out loud!"

The others were looking at him in shock. Iida said, "H-How old were you when you made this?"

"Uhhh, eight or nine?"

"Midoriya-san," Tsuyu started slowly, "how did you know what an atom was at eight, kero?"

"I researched for mom- this was before I knew what quirks were exactly. I wanted to figure out ways she could use her quirk because she said it was useless! Then I realized that it was fun to pick apart different ways someone could use a quirk. And it went from there!"

"Wait, look," Izuku lit up, thinking of a way to some of the people there. "I have some older ones on some other heroes! Like Crimson Riot, Death Arms, Midnight, and others! Midnight was fun to do, it's so cool how her quirk changes her body system altogether!"

"I-I think we'd be more interested in the notes you have on us," Iida chimed in.

"Yeah! Yeah! Do me!" Kaminari requested in excitement.

"Sure thing!" Izuku handed Kaminari his notes. "Ok... Kaminari automatically goes for the limit, this will incapate him and make him vulnerable in battle, leading to many openings and weaknesses. Just use some electricity resistant oil beneath you, and he'll be fooled into thinking it's a conductive liquid, leaving him thinking that he could win if he used his full out attack," Izuku spoke matter of factly. "He's also easily distracted by shiny objects. Or you can overload his body with too much electricity."

"What's this unique applications section?" Kaminari asks, thoroughly confused.

"Oh, that's where I just brainstorm ways you could use your quirk if you were a villain. For example, you could probably manipulate people's nerves since they run on electrical impulses and make them your puppets if you could figure out how to finely manipulate electrical currents. You could cause mass blackouts," Izuku said, starting to list out possibilities of how it would play out, "give them heart problems like arrhythmia, or you could simply cause somebody to suffer a heart attack. But you would have to be very careful with the puppet thing, and learn how the brain works in the most minute of details, which is why the other more straightforward methods are mentioned. Although, if you were a villain, I figure it wouldn't matter very much since incapacitated or dead people would probably achieve your goal as well." It felt like Izuku had slowed down his mumbles and was having a conversation with himself.

"The best unique application I wrote was the one on Yaoyorozu, her quirk's so interesting and versatile, if she tried, she could make elements with her quirk and become practically invincible. I still think she should fatten up more, have a better stockpile, but what she can do with the bare basics of her quirk is fascinating."

Bakugou quietly snuck back into class, oddly fascinated by Izuku's analyses. Wait! Shit! Don't think of the shitty nerd like he's special! He's beneath you!

"She really should have taken the internship with Fat Gum instead of Uwabami," Izuku continues, "They both use fatty lipids in their quirks as well, it would've been very efficient in the long run. And actually, if she was a villain she'd be able to do pretty well with forgeries, and although mass-producing money could be difficult and maybe cause problems it shouldn't be too difficult...She could potentially even produce firearms in a pinch. If she tried, she could also make nukes and rival her power with AFO with one quirk alone! Alternatively, she could produce a large amount of antimatter, which would have much more destructive results. The main problem, of course, being she would instantly vaporise herself if she did so." An evil glint started to shine in his eye. "But if she were trying to be a suicide bomber, it would be very, very effective. Plus ultra, right?"

A couple of classmates gave Yaoyorozu a few nervous glances. Yaoyorozu looked concerned. Izuku just continues his earlier monologue. "She could get blueprints, so she can make working robotics too. She's smart enough to know how to make the components of everything, even if it would be slightly hard. Though the coding would be hard. She may have a special hard drive blueprint that linked to already established code. "

Bakugou gulped.

“If she aimed to be a support, she would do very well at it.”

BZZZTT “Oh crap! Nedzu!”

'What other staff members do you have notes on?' the message read.

"Um ... all of them sir… Maybe I should start with Midnight?”

‘Perhaps you should start with All Might, ’ another message said.

“Awww, I was so ready to geek out about the quirk! ... All Might is really cool too..! Ah, sir, should I read that out loud in front of the class?"

‘Why not?’

“Ok! So!” He flipped the pages. “All Might has not shown any proof or information about his quirk, many assume it’s simple strength, but I don’t know because it can change the weather with a single punch, which makes it frankly more powerful than probably a simple strength augmentation. There are rumours he was not born with his Quirk, but given it by someone else. These are unconfirmed, though, and frankly, impossible.”

(In the principal's office, watching the class through the video feed Nedzu was showing him, All Might let out a sigh of relief. His secret was safe.)

"It's much more likely he was a late bloomer, or it has some weird activation thing he had to figure out first. Either that, or the quirk refused to come out until he was strong enough, this would make him part of the ‘stubborn quirks’ group... It’s all so very interesting!” Izuku exclaimed.

Ashido spoke out, breaking out of the collective stunned daze because she remembered something Izuku had said before. “Oh, but didn’t you say your quirk was like that once Deku?”

He froze.

(All Might contemplated trying to intervene. He couldn't let his secret get out.)

“I know I brought this up at the USJ, but the more I think about it, the more your quirks sound alike, kero.” Tsuyu pointed out.

“Um, I think it’s a universal experience kinda thing?” He started to sweat and fidgeted with the carpet again.

Todoroki muttered to himself, “Secret love child, I’m sure I’m right, my theory must be right, look at the proof.”

“A-Anywho, All might doesn’t have any confirmed weaknesses, however he did seem to be doing less patrol hours, could this be to do with an event?”

"His Quirk must have weakened after Izuku was born," Todoroki muttered to himself.

“Waiting until thirty minutes or so until the end of his patrol would probably be your best bet to catch him off guard, and-“ here he let out a small giggle, “kick him in the nuts to give him pain. Then, attack his heart or something before he can recover. Or maybe just poison him.”

("If Izuku ever becomes a villain, I'm faking my death", All Might told Nedzu.

“He’s smart enough to figure it out, though.” Nedzu pointed out, sipping at his ever present cup of tea and laughing at his fears.)

“Otherwise, there are no prominent weak points to take advantage of,” he finished, and looked up to his classmates. Bakugou looked like he’d seen a ghost.

“Anywho, why did this start again?”

"Bakugou was right. Midoriya would be the scariest villain" Mina stated, slightly horrified.

Aizawa walked in, “Curfew, get to bed.”

Everyone replied, “Yes sensei,” and avoided looking at his eyes.

“I know that look. What have you problem children been up to now?” Aizawa asked.

“NOTHING! Nothing at ALL! We were just-“

"We were debating who would be the scariest villain," Bakugou answered, nervously looking at Izuku. "I kinda wish Ashido never brought it up," he whispered to Aizawa.

“He talked about your eyes and stuff and your weak points...”

Aizawa merely shrugged. “That’s smart of the problem child.” He walked out.

The other students still looking traumatized wanted to tell him of the emotional weakness part, but they were too afraid.

And that’s how Izuku got his entire class to try and win him over for the next week. Bakugou vowed never to piss off that useless Deku again. Not after learning just how easily he could possibly kill him.
